The National Movement in India forms an important epoch in history as it helped to weld diverse people and sections of society into one nation. All sections came together to not only fight against the British rule but also to build a new country.

Early Associations

In Class VII you have read about the revolt of 1857 in which the soldiers, ordinary peasants, artisans and landlords and even princes joined the struggle against the British rule. While the movement was opposed to the British, it did not have any new vision of the country. It in fact wanted to restore the rule of the old kings and queens and also the same caste-based society.

With the growth of English education during the late nineteenth century in some major cities like Calcutta, Madras and Bombay a new consciousness began to develop. The intellectuals of the time opposed to the inequalities and injustices of the old social system. They wanted a democratic political order and they wanted at the same time to point out the exploitation and injustice caused by the British rule and fight to end it. This was the beginning of the national movement in India.

The seeds of new consciousness began in the second half of the 19th century. The educated Indians after studying the nature of the British rule and its impact on India became more and more critical of the British policies in India. They began to get together and discuss these issues and also formed associations for this. In 1866, Dadabhai Naoroji organized the “East India Association” in London to discuss the Indian question. During 1866 to 1885, various leaders like Surendranath Banerjee, Justice M.G. Ranade, Badaruddin Tyabji, K.C. Tejag and G.Subramaniam organized associations in Calcutta, Pune, Bombay and Madras to discuss the problems faced by Indians in these provinces. These associations had nationalist zeal and tried to unite intellectuals. Though many of these associations functioned in specific parts of the country, their goals were stated as the goals of all the people of India, not those of any one region, community or class. They worked with the idea that the people should be sovereign – a modern consciousness and a key feature of nationalism. In other words, they believed that the Indian people should be empowered to take decisions regarding their affairs. Many of these intellectuals also led campaigns against some British policies like taxes on textiles, racial discrimination against Indians, repressive laws against Indian newspapers etc. They realised the importance of discussing the policies of the government and organising campaigns to change them.

The Indian National Congress

The Indian National Congress was formed at the beginning of the 20th century. The Congress was the first national political organization of the Indian people. It was formed to fight against British rule and to promote democratic ideals and functioning of government and also used them to educate people and wrote appeals to the grievances and fighting for those rights.

The second major objective of the early Congress was to create a common political platform or programme around which political workers in different parts of the country could gather and conduct their political activities, educating and mobilizing people on an all-India basis. This was to be accomplished by taking up those grievances and fighting for those rights which Indians had in common in relation to the rulers. They studied the grievances of people and wrote appeals to the government and also used them to educate the people about their political rights.

The third major objective was to promote democratic ideals and functioning in India. The Indian National Congress functioned democratically, discussing all issues and trying to evolve consensus or sometimes voting also.

At this stage the INC decided not to take up issues relating to social reform as it would divide the Indian people. Reform was to be carried on through different forums.

In 1886, delegates to the Congress numbering 436 were elected by different local organisations and groups indicating its popularity in one year. Hereafter, the National Congress met every year in different parts of the country. The number of delegates soon increased to thousands. Its delegates were mostly lawyers, journalists, traders, industrialists, teachers and landlords. There were very few women like Kadambini Ganguli who was the first woman graduate from Calcutta. Mostly men from higher social background attended these meetings.

During the first 20 years, the Congress was led by the leaders who are known as Moderate Nationalists. The Moderates urged the Government to introduce a number of reforms. They demanded a greater voice for Indians in the government and in administration.

They wanted the Imperial Legislative Council to be made more representative, given more power, and introduced in provinces where none existed. They demanded that Indians be placed in high positions in the government. For this purpose it called for civil service examinations to be held in India as well, not just in London. The demand for Indianisation of the administration was part of a movement against racism, since most important jobs at the time were monopolised by the white Europeans.

Leaders like Naoroji, R.C. Dutt and Ranade studied the economic impact of the British Rule and concluded that the British were draining India of her wealth through taxes and other means and leaving her poorer and poorer. They drew attention to the problem of poverty and famine and blamed it on the British policies of excessive land revenue, export of grains etc. The Congress passed many resolutions on the salt tax, treatment of Indian labourers abroad, and the sufferings of forest dwellers caused by an interfering forest administration. The early leaders were convinced of the need for national industrial development to end poverty in India. However, the British rule was standing in the way of development as they not only were draining the wealth of India to England but also enabling the cheap selling of British goods in India and restraining Indian crafts and industries.

The Moderate leaders reached out to people in different parts of the country by holding lectures, meetings and tours. They believed that the British were committed to freedom and justice and would accept the demands when expressed properly. They carried on their agitation through newspapers, public lectures. They passed resolutions, led deputations to submit petitions to the government. In short, it may be said, they adopted a policy of pray, petition and protest. Often they were not able to persuade the government to change, but in the process formulated Indian opinion on important issues. This was very important for the future growth of Indian national movement.

Why did the early nationalists believe that the British were responsible for the poverty and famines in India?

Why do you think the early nationalists did not want to reestablish the rule of the old kings of India? Would it not have been better than the British rule?

Extremist Phase 1905-1920 (Swadeshi Movement)

With the start of the Swadeshi Movement around 1903, the Indian national movement took a major leap forward. Women, students and a large section of the urban and rural population of Maharashtra and other parts of India became actively involved in politics for the first time. One major trigger for the movement was the proposal for partitioning of Bengal into East and West Bengal in 1905 by Curzon. The Nationalists immediately saw this as a political act by the government to divide the Bengali people and also weaken the national movement. Even the ordinary people of Bengal were enraged by this act and took to streets to protest against it. There were massive protests, petitions and campaigns but they were not heeded to and the government partitioned Bengal in 1905. Several protest meetings were held and a call was given for boycotting English cloth and salt. There was a tremendous mass response to this call. Boycott and public burning of foreign cloth, picketing of shops selling foreign goods became common in remote corners of Bengal and in many important towns and cities throughout the country. Women refused to wear foreign bangles and use foreign utensils; washermen refused to wash foreign clothes and even prints declined offers which contained foreign sugar. This spontaneous unity of diverse social groups is the basis of nationalism. The early nationalists were successful in germinating it.

There was also a call for boycott of all government institutions like schools, colleges, courts etc. People set up Swadeshi schools and colleges and parallel courts in which they settled their mutual disputes. The idea was to refuse to cooperate with the government to run and in this way undermine its position. The Swadeshi Movement gave tremendous impetus to Indian industry. In fact beginnings were made in the manufacture of Swadeshi salt, sugar, matches and other products on a large-scale. The movement gave a stimulus to P. C. Ray’s Bengal Chemical Works, and encouraged Jamshedji Tata of Bombay to open his famous Steel Plant in Bihar. The movement also created tremendous demand for indigenous goods. The textile industry of India, in particular received a great impetus from the Swadeshi movement.

The Moderates and the Extremists

In the next Congress session (1905), the extremist Nationalists led by Tilak, Biju Chandra Pal and Lala Lajpat Rai were in favour of extending the movement to the rest of India and to demand for full fledged freedom or ‘Swaraj’. Bal Gangadhar Tilak gave the famous slogan, “Swaraj is my birthright and I shall have it.” They wanted to move away from the earlier strategy of submitting petitions to government to mobilising the masses against the British rule and forcing the British to give up and go. They called the earlier strategy as ‘mendicancy’ (or begging for alms). The old leaders, called ‘Moderate nationalists’ wanted to continue on a more gradual pace of movement and felt that the masses were not yet ready for a full scale movement for freedom and self-rule. The difference between the two sections of leaders grew unprecedented human suffering and destruction. As the war ended an era of revolutions started in Europe. A socialist revolution took place in Russia in which peasants, workers and soldiers led by communists deposed the Emperor and abolished landlordism and private ownership of land and factories. They also advocated equality among nations and freedom for all nations subjugated by colonial powers. In India, the war brought great suffering for the common people as the British tried to raise funds and resources for the war by raising taxes, exporting food and other necessities to the armies. This increased the discontent among the people against the British rule. As the news of the Russian Revolution spread, it too inspired people that unequal rulers can be got rid of and a society can be built with equality and justice for all. Everyone expected that the British will accept the just demands for democratic rule in India and bring in the constitutional reforms. However this was not to be and the British introduced harsher laws. It was under these conditions when the discontent of the people was increasing and the British were getting more repressive that Mahatma Gandhi came back from South Africa and joined the Indian freedom movement.

1. On the day of Partition of Bengal

On 16th October 1905, the day the partition of Bengal went into effect, was observed in Bengal as a day of mourning. Throughout Bengal, no cooking was done and shops and market places were closed. In CALCUTTA a hartal was declared, people took out processions and bathed in the Ganges in the morning and then paraded on the streets singing “Vande mataram”. People lied rubbishes on each other’s hands as a symbol of unity of the two halves of Bengal. Later in the day Ananda Mohan Bose and Surendranath Banerjee addressed two mass meetings attended by about 75,000 people. And eventually led to a split of the Congress in 1907 Surat session into two. The extremist leaders like Tilak were forced to leave the Congress. The movement government came down heavily upon the extremists and the activists of the Swaraj movement. Most of the leaders like Tilak were imprisoned and exiled. Gradually the movement petered out. Many young Swarajis felt let down by these developments and began to turn to terrorist attacks on unpopular British officials. They hoped to restrain the repression and oppression unleashed by the British in this way. Even though they did not succeed and were caught and hanged or imprisoned, they kept alive the spirit of nationalism and the idea of making supreme sacrifices for it. The national movement revived again in 1915 when Tilak came back from his exile and joined hands with Annie Besant to launch a movement for ‘Home Rule’. The two factions of the Congress united again in 1916 through Lucknow pact.

Improve your learning:

1. Correct the false statements:
   a. In the early phase of Indian National Congress it included only people from Bombay.
   b. Indian industrialist began to establish companies in different parts of India.
   c. People in India expected that India will become democratic after the first world war.
   d. Write an imaginary dialogue between the extremist and moderate activists of Indian National congress in the context of their a) main demands; and b) mode of agitation.

2. Why was it important to understand the economic impact of British rule in India? What were the major areas of its impact?

3. What did other parts of the country and people respond to division of Bengal?

4. Locate the following in India map:
   a. Calkutta (Kolkata)
   b. Madras (Chennai)
   c. Bombay (Mumbai)
   d. Lucknow

5. Locate the following in the world map:
   a. Britain
   b. France
   c. Russia
   d. Germany

6. A few leaders like Gandhi, Tilak, Subhash Chandra Bose, Bhagat Singh sacrificed their lives for the sake of our nation. What would have happened, if they did not do so?

Project:

1. Collect photos of national leaders who participated in freedom struggle and prepare an album. Make a report on it and present in the class.